

Mapping a Setting

Whether a fantasy world or an actual neighborhood, great settings for stories feel real. Authors often create maps of their made-up worlds to help visualize and describe realistic settings. Readers can also use maps to illustrate their vision of a story's setting, remember important places, and understand story events.

Draw a map of a story you've read, including as much detail as possible. Add place names and labels!

2. Mark three events from the story on your map and describe what happened OR pick three places on your map and explain why they are important to the story.

#1: _____

#2: _____

#3: _____

3. Bonus: If you could enter the world of any book, what would you choose and why?
